

Matt Carless
Every manuscript should have your address and contact details on the title page only.

An agent's address can be included underneath if you have one.

NOVEL MANUSCRIPT FORMAT

by Matt Carless

Chapter One

This standard manuscript format is required for prose fiction so that work can be easily read and edited by editors and copy editors. It also allows editors to both estimate the word count and accurately determine how many pages will be required to produce a book using the page size, style, and type font of their choice.

Manuscripts for full-length novels require a separate title page. The author's real name and address, telephone number and e-mail address should be shown in the upper left corner of the first page, single-spaced. The title of the story appears in all capitals about half way down the page. The author's name follows the title on the by-line and should be shown as the author wants it to appear when published. A real name, or pseudonym may be used and may include initials or actual given name, and professional designation.

All text should be double-spaced and flush-left, not justified, with a ``ragged'' right margin. All paragraphs are indented by five spaces and not separated by an additional blank line. Each sentence should end with two spaces.

Top and bottom margins must be set to allow for 25 lines of text to the page (not including the page header). Left and right margins must be set to allow for an average of 10 words to a line in order to accurately assess the final word count. In publishing terms, one ``word'' equals six characters (including punctuation and spaces), thus each line of text must allow for a maximum of 60 characters of text.

Each page, except the title page, must include a header consisting of the author's real surname, the title of the work (or a keyword) in capitals, and the page number.

#

Scene breaks are indicated like this. Do not simply add an extra line space as this can be missed by the typesetter. Indicate italics by underlining.

Chapter Two

Begin each new chapter on a new page like this with the chapter number about a third of the way down the page.

Writers should never use the word-count feature of their computers to determine the number of words in a manuscript. The term word count, as used in the publishing industry, is actually inaccurate. Editors count pages, not words. Properly prepared manuscripts, with 25 lines of type to a page and an average of 10 words to a line are assumed to contain 250 words on each full page. Partial pages, where the text covers half or less of the available space, are counted as 125 words for the publishers purposes, except for the first pages of chapters or short stories which are counted as full pages. Once the initial word-count has been calculated, it should be rounded up to the nearest 1000 words (100 for short stories).